Arkansas Democrat-Gazette/JOHN LYNCH

Drugmaker's attorney fee: $181 million

Award goes to Texas firm for winning Risperdal case.

Nature-based learning

Agent says he's a felon who possesses fully automatic firearms.

Firing due to excess aid, for UCA, says File

Parole Board approved inmate early-release rules.

His cousin slain at 14, boy forever changed

Emmett Till's story has inspired many stories and documentaries. The Arkansas Democrat-Gazette's coverage of the case is a reminder of the importance of understanding history and the impact it has on our present. The parole board's decision to approve early release for the inmate is a significant step in acknowledging the harm caused by his actions and striving for rehabilitation. It's crucial to ensure that the parole board's decisions are based on a thorough evaluation of the inmate's behavior and a clear understanding of the crime. The parole board's actions demonstrate the importance of reforming our justice system to focus on rehabilitation and second chances. The case of Emmett Till is a powerful example of how history can inspire change and is a reminder of the resilience of the human spirit.
Human trafficking alleged
Tulsa police say man forced women into prostitution

Tulsa police arrested two men and a woman, including Shalleria Lynn Williams, 32, of Tulsa, after a traffic stop on Monday night.

The Tulsa Police Department said a traffic stop led to the discovery of three people, including a minor, who had been forces into prostitution.

The arrest came less than a month after the Tulsa Police Department announced a new initiative to combat human trafficking.

The initiative, called the Tulsa Police Department's Human Trafficking Task Force, was launched in January with the goal of identifying and rescuing victims of human trafficking.

The task force consists of detectives from the Tulsa Police Department, the Tulsa County Sheriff's Office, and the Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigation.

The task force also includes members from the District Attorney's Office and the Tulsa County District Attorney's Office.

Tulsa Police Chief Paramedic said the task force has made four arrests and rescued three victims since its launch.

The Tulsa Police Department said the arrests were made in connection with a vice sweep operation targeting human trafficking.

Tulsa police also said they are seeking the public's help in identifying potential victims of human trafficking.

The department is asking anyone who suspects someone may be a victim of human trafficking to call 911 or 918-589-1873.